You never really understand a person until you consider things from his point of view . . . until you climb into his skin and walk around in it.\textsuperscript{1}