

Welcome Letter Evaluation

Criteria	4	3	2	1
The letter is clearly directed toward the specified audience, using words and details chosen to communicate clearly and effectively with this group.
The letter provides specific, relevant, and appropriate examples of welcoming that take into account the character's personality, life experiences, likes/dislikes, and reason(s) for moving.
The letter provides ample evidence of learning from reading, research, and group discussion, including reference to learning about people from the Middle East, effects of immigration, and issues related to growing up and adaptation
The letter, overall, represents thinking and ideas that are culturally sensitive without relying on stereotypes or generalizations and that make clear attempts at bridging the two cultures in question.
