

Fictional Character Profile

Student's Name: Sample

Herbert Pocket

A Quote/Greeting

"Be it ever so humble,
there's no place like
home!"

Song Now Playing

"The Harmonious Blacksmith" by George
Frederick Handel

My Latest Blog Entry

Growing up a Pocket

As I think more about to asking Clara to marry me (when I have enough money), I look back on growing up in the Pocket family. Being the oldest, and being constantly surrounded by all those kids, could be a strain since Mum's not the most attentive in the child care arena.

I do know that being in charge of them so often made me a more responsible adult, but I did also resent having to do all that (even if it made me into a fine boxer and wrestler in the process.)

I'm also plagued by the fear that I'm never going to be good enough. I got the feeling that Mum never thought much of Dad. I don't want those kinds of feelings to be a part of my life with Clara.

About Me

Once known on the amateur boxing circuit as the "Pale Young Gentleman," I live in London and work as a clerk.

I just got a new roommate, Pip (whom I call Handel).

I love rules, order, and doing things "just so." I come from a family that is less than orderly, so I tend to try to restore order whenever I can.

My ambition in life is to earn enough money to marry the girl I love!

My Interests and Favorites

I love to read self-improvement books, especially ones about manners and being a gentleman, as I'm always seeking to make myself better.

My favorite things to do are to visit Clara and her father. I'm an immensely patient person and I can put with just about anybody.

I like to daydream, imagining a time when I can live a life of leisure and keep a small, well-ordered family in a small, well-ordered home all our own.